Part 1

Dear Jo,

congratulations for winning the 1st place in the photography competition I'm really grateful for you sharing the 1st place prize holiday with me.

Given that you mentioned how beautiful the beach is I think going sailing the sea would be a great idea because we can observe the near by coral reefs clearly and we can observe how gorgeous the beach from the sea

I'm really sorry, I have an important school project scheduled for that month. But I can clear some space in my schedule next month to free up a week.

I have a small question do I need to arrange something to bring on the holiday if so I can be ready to go on the next month without any issues

I hope to see you soon,

Sameera

Part 2

The friends rushed to join the long line of people after getting off the bus. Under a marquee that promised a comeback, Asha, Kade, and Lin huddled together. An old man handed a faded program and told the theater about his wife Margaret's laughter and midnight shows. As the rain misted the pavement, they shared popcorn and were warmed by the man's memories. Lin learned to talk, Asha learned to laugh, and Kade learned to put down his camera and just observe in the dark, flickering black-and-white images. The program was resting in Asha's hand like a lucky charm when the lights came back on. They came out of the line with little flashes of brilliance stitched into their memories, not wealth. They agreed to preserve each other's memories and come back the following season.
