Digging into the past

Last year, Kate Marshall was given a very exciting opportunity – to help her father, who's a history lecturer, at a historical site! He was leading a team to dig up and explore the area.

When they arrived, though, the site wasn't quite what Kate had expected.

16  D So the first job was to remove it all and prepare the land for digging. Says Kate, 'Dad had me I'd have to work so hard as soon as we got there!'

But when the site was completely cleared, the team found pieces of ancient pots on the ground. However, they weren't as exciting as everyone had thought. Kate's dad told them that the important pots were still buried under the ground. And because no-one had touched them for centuries, the team would learn far more about the area's history – but first they would have to dig deeper. Says Kate, 17  F But we all knew Dad was right.

The site was divided into small squares, with a leader for each square, who told everyone how to dig. 'It wasn't as easy as it sounded, either,' Kate reports. 'Instead of just digging great big holes, we all had to dig really carefully, and remove small amounts of soil each time. 18  C So it made sense.'

'My friends at home were really interested in what I was doing,' Kate explains. 'They kept texting me about what I'd found. 19  G But actually, we were looking for ordinary, everyday objects that could tell us about the lives of people who'd lived in the area centuries ago.'

In the end, though, Kate wasn't disappointed by what she found. 'One day, when I was digging away, I found a stone with a strange shape. 20  A Someone had obviously made it hundreds of years ago, and it was really important. So Dad cleaned it up, and said it would go to the nearby museum. So I was really happy. At last, I'd found something interesting!'

Hi Anna,

I've just been to the museum in our city. That was my first visit, believe it or (27) not! I wanted to collect some information for our class history project. We have to hand it (28) over soon, don't we?

I went to the Ancient History section, (29) where the museum keeps all its ancient Egyptian stuff. It was really interesting! There were some amazing statues of various animals, so I drew some pictures of them and then (30) did some research about them online when I got home.

I've still got some work to do on my project, so I'll need to go back to the museum again some time soon. In fact, (31) why don't we go together? I don't think you've been there before, (32) have you? I'm sure you'll find something that you could use for your project.

See you soon!

Sally
